Can you feel the rainbow? Newtownards can

People living in or around Newtownards, on the East coast of Northern Ireland near Belfast, will be seeing strange lights in the sky this week. This spectacle, called 'Global Rainbow' signals a hundred days to go until the opening of the London 2012 Olympics festival in Northern Ireland, which will see 14 cultural events across the region.

Lasers will light up the sky until Saturday and will be seen from miles away, hopefully attracting awareness of the event. It was designed by American Artist Yvette Mattern and presented by Ards Borough Council and the Arts Council, and the switch was flicked on Wednesday evening.
